TONY DESMARAIIS

Tony Desmarais was high scoring forward with an explosive temper on the Allan Cup Stampeders of 1946. Tony kept opposing forwards and defensemen honest with his aggressive play.

Three of his sons have already left their mark on the Calgary sporting scene:

Marty, formerly played for Calgary Buffalos and Spurs and at present with Providence Reds;

Tommy, a fine minor hockey star at present attending University of Calgary;

Rene, a member of Alberta Juvenile champs as well as a member of the Alberta Junior Golf Team.

Tony Desmarais is a Department Manager at the Bay in Calgary. He is an active golfer at Earl Grey Golf Club with a low handicap of 6.

The Way I See It

BY BILL POWERS

If you look at your watch about the same time the referee drops the puck tonight you'll notice it's about half past eight.

Now isn't that interesting.

I do have a point to make, however, considering the starting times of Stampeder home games.

Why is it that the club's night games start at 8:30 p.m. and afternoon games at 2:30 p.m. while that other hockey team (the 67s plus one) open at 8 p.m. and 2 p.m.?

This came to mind during the recent Sweden exhibition game which was promoted by the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede Board. The Board decided to start it at 8 p.m. and I wanted to know why.

Until that time I had paid little attention because when Ron Butlin was running the senior situation I fought a losing battle to try and get the earlier games.

Well, to get to the question at hand, I talked to Corral manager Wilf Baker.

He explained that the 8 p.m. start was put to use in an effort to attract more young people. I wanted to know more.

"Look at it this way," said Baker. "You want to take your boy to the hockey game. If it starts at 8:30 you don't get away from the rink till about 15 to 11 and you're not home until well after 11."

"Starting at 8 the game is over by 10:20 and you can have the youngster in bed by 11, a reasonable hour for a student."

About afternoon games he said, "Starting at 2 a family still has time to get home and have supper, even prepare it, at a decent hour. After a 2:30 game you are not going to get home until after 5:30 and that's going to make for a late supper."

I conceded that Wilf had a good point.

And added a few myself:

For instance, an 8 p.m. start would give certain fans at least an hour's drinking time at the New Noble or the Big Four Lounge.

Or there'd be no rush problem in picking up that extra 12-pack for the after game bash.

Or there'd be lots of time to pick up that bucket of chicken with no fears of missing the first few minutes of Channel 4's late movie.

Or from my point of view there'd be more than ample time on a week night to get back to the office and churn out a yarn on the game. Under the present circumstances, things are a little hectic, especially if the crowd is a large one and we're all fighting our way off the Stampede grounds.

But something tells me we'll have to live with it.

"It Pays to Keep Clean"

Blue Line Chatter

BY GEORGE BILYCH

When and where (possibly if) that action will come is highly problematical, but the mere fact that the Russians are talking about playing the pros and are getting a reaction from the National Hockey League brings a new refreshing air to the hockey sphere.

It's difficult not to be intrigued by the possibilities. Even if they're not talking seriously, at least they're talking for public consumption. That, alone, is something that's taken a long time coming.

Let's face it, a Russia versus NHL match (or series of matches) would be the biggest thing that's ever happened to hockey.

And therein lies the very reason why the NHL probably is even giving thoughts to the plan. The NHL has very little to gain — except, possibly, a pile of money — and there's always the chance they could lose the game and a whole lot of stature with it.

The financial aspect, however, would leave every would-be promoter drooling. It's already been suggested that this particular hockey game could take a page out of boxing's book and sell rinkside seats at $100 apiece. And have the people standing in line for 'em too.

Played in any rink in North America, this would be the only 100% guaranteed sellout attraction. To use an old cliche, this indeed would be the legendary licence to print one's own money.

Also, it would be a natural for world-wide television. With the satellite making it all possible, it could be beamed live and in color to every corner in the world. One can only imagine the advertising revenue alone to be gained from such a venture.

Of course, the guessing games will carry on long into the night on what the make-up of an NHL all-star team would be. If that particular game were to be played next week, how would you agree with a line-up along these lines?

Jean Beliveau centering Bobby Hull and Gordie Howe, and how could you possibly go for anybody else as your first-string unit. As for a second line, argue as to whether you'd have Phil Esposito, Stan Mikita or Norm Ullman at centre, between, let's say, Rod Gilbert and Frank Mahovlich. Can you hear the arguments raging already?

Some might say that John Ferguson deserves a berth on this team. If, indeed, the NHL believes its own talk that hitting would be a major difference, then Ferguson would almost be a natural. If nothing else, he'd let them know what the Canadian game was all about.

Bobby Orr is a must on defence. After that you get the discussions again. J. C. Tremblay and Harry Howell will get a lot of votes. But how about Teddy Green or a Pat Stapleton?

And when you talk about goal, can anyone really go wrong with the St. Louis tandem of Glenn Hall and Jacques Plante? Even the best NHL snipers say no.

The interesting part of picking this particular team is that one doesn't necessarily go to his all-star choices. Being of a specific purpose (playing the Russians), the personnel would be chosen with precisely that thought in mind. Based on these terms, there could be many interesting choices.

Possibly the most crucial position on the whole team is that of coach. It's on his shoulders that the prestige of the NHL would be perched.
